William Faris, CEO of Occupational Managed Care Alliance (OMCA) Recognized as “Partner in Healthcare”

LOUISVILLE, KY – In the March 10, 2006 issue of Business First, William Faris, the co-founder and CEO of Occupational Managed Care Alliance, Inc. (OMCA) is recognized for his leadership in health related Administrative Services by being named a “Partner in Healthcare.”

The inaugural “Partners in Healthcare” special publication recognizes businesspeople whose work enables medical professionals to do their jobs well and who contribute to this area of our economy. The healthcare industry is a major economic engine in the Greater Louisville area, and the dynamic individuals designated as “Partners in Healthcare” all play a major role in the success of the industry.

Said Faris, “In workers’ comp, choosing the right doctor is critical. Employees must be treated and monitored by doctors and nurse case managers who understand occupational medicine and who are aggressive in helping them return to work promptly, efficiently and safely.”

For insurance carriers, self-funded groups and self-funded employers in more than 40 states, Faris’s Louisville-based company, OMCA, has delivered claims and managed care services to more than 4,000 employers. “In Kentucky, our company designed and implemented the first workers’ compensation managed care plan to be certified by the Kentucky Department of Workers’ Claims and we were the first program to attain certified status in all 120 counties,” said Faris.
